The Third Anniversary of Women's March Global to Bring Millions Together

People around the world will march to the theme of ending violence against women.

WORLD | January 14 - On January 19th and 20th people around the world will flood the streets in protest of gender inequalities and gender-based violence. The third Anniversary March, known as #WomensWave, celebrates 2017's revolutionary Women's March which brought together 6 million marchers across the globe in support of women's rights and freedoms.

The 2018 impact report showcases the powerful effect Women's March Global has had on the planet. With an average 18 events a month, over one million in social reach, half a million petition signatures, hundreds of thousands of participants speaking up, plus 8 global campaigns Women's March Global is taking big steps towards positive change around the world.

"We have demonstrated that people coming together peacefully can change the world," said Women's March Global Interim Executive Director Uma Mishra-Newbury. "Women's March Global is not just a moment in time, it is a movement that is uniting people across borders, languages and countries and we are excited to see this movement continue to grow."

Marches are to be held in cities around the world including Lagos, Geneva, Kampala, Lusaka, Oahu, Saskatoon and San Carlos Nuevo. A live stream of the marches will be available on the Women's March Global Facebook page.
